Unit (1) Egypt-Africa Cooperation

Read the following passage, then answer the questions:

Water is one of the most valuable resources on Earth. People, animals, and plants all need water to survive, but many countries are facing serious water problems. In the past, people depended mainly on rivers, lakes, and rainfall to obtain fresh water. As populations grew and cities became larger, the demand for water increased. Agriculture also uses a large amount of water because crops need regular irrigation. In some areas, climate change has made the situation more difficult by causing longer periods of drought and changing rainfall patterns. Scientists and governments are therefore looking for new ways to save and manage water. Modern technologies can help farmers use water more efficiently through systems such as drip irrigation. This method delivers small amounts of water directly to the roots of plants, reducing waste. People can also help by repairing leaking taps, using less water at home, and avoiding unnecessary waste. In addition, some countries have built desalination plants that remove salt from seawater and make it suitable for human use. However, these solutions can be expensive and require large amounts of energy. Protecting rivers and lakes from pollution is also essential because polluted water can harm humans, animals, and the environment. Schools and communities can play an important role by teaching people about the value of water and encouraging responsible use. Saving water is not only the responsibility of governments; every individual can make a difference. If people use water carefully today, future generations will have a better chance of finding enough clean water for their needs. Protecting this precious resource requires cooperation, awareness, and responsible action from everyone.

Choose the correct answer from a, b, c or d:

1. Why has the demand for water increased?

a) Because populations have grown and cities have become larger.
b) Because people have stopped using water.
c) Because rainfall has increased everywhere.
d) Because agriculture no longer needs water.

2. Drip irrigation helps farmers to ..... .

a) increase water waste
b) use water more efficiently
c) pollute rivers
d) stop growing crops
